In chemistry, the empirical formula of a chemical is a simple expression of the relative number of each type of atom or ratio of the elements in the compound. Empirical formulas are the standard for ionic compounds, such as  $\text{CaCl}_2$ , and for macromolecules, such as  $\text{SiO}_2$ . An empirical formula makes no reference to isomerism, structure, or absolute number of atoms.

A chemical compound is a chemical substance composed of many identical molecules (or molecular entities) composed of atoms from more than one element held together by chemical bonds. A chemical element bonded to an identical chemical element is not a chemical compound since only one element, not two different elements, is involved. There are four types of compounds, depending on how the ...

Converting Formulas to Names. Chemists have established different sets of rules for writing the names and formulas of different types of chemical compounds, so the first step in writing a name from a chemical formula is to decide what type of compound the formula represents.

2 It is important to note that the balancing of an equation is accomplished by placing numbers in front of the proper atoms or molecules and not as subscripts. In an equation, all chemical species appear as correct formula units. The addition (or change) of a subscript changes the meaning of the formula unit and of the equation.
